About us this year (2008-2009): Last year's season is long gone and our young ladies are looking forward to improving on a season that included accolades such as five all conference selections and one all state selection.

This year's invitation into the highest bracket of the Diamond State is both an honor and challenge for our team. With our team having a few new pieces to add to our team, playing in this bracket could be a very steep task for our team so early in the season. Regardless, our team understands that no task is insurmountable and we will meet this challenge with the energy and focus it deserves.

The biggest strength of this year's team is that we have strong guard play. Alexa Webb is a versatile guard who has started for three years now. She can play positions from the 1-3. Andrea Hines is a legit Division 1 point guard. In fact, she has received a few scholarship offers already and it seems that the sky is the limit for her. She can score, distribute, facilitate and defend. Amber Genwright is a strong guard for our team. Though she is coming off an injury, she is working hard to defend her title as one of the best defensive players in the state.

Our post play and swing play should also be vastly improved. Naiesha Brown has worked hard to improve her play on the perimeter and the post. Danielle Fleming emerged as an impact player last year as an undersized, yet skilled forward. Also, joining this group is senior swing player Olivia Peeke. Olivia has an extraordinary knowledge of the game. She has added to that knowledge improved perimeter and post play.

We are also happy to add more than a few girls to this year's team. Standing out among them will be Johanna McMillan and Anjaleace White. Johanna is another guard who has an exceptional understanding of the game. Anjaleace, too, should stand out this year. At 6'2", Anjaleace has the ability to impact this year's girls hoop season as she is a gifted post player with a desire to be the best player she can be.
